Bayer announces National Sales Manager for spray polyurethane foam (SPF) business

Spring, Texas, June 26, 2015 — Bayer MaterialScience LLC (<http://www.polyurethanes.bayer.com/>) has appointed Jeremy Parker as the National Sales Manager for the spray polyurethane foam (SPF) insulation and roofing materials business. Parker has been with Bayer for six years, recently serving as an SPF regional account manager for the south central United States. In his new role, Parker will lead national sales strategy for SPF in residential building and commercial construction markets.

Parker began his career in residential construction, working as a project superintendent for both production and luxury custom homes. Parker has completed the Spray Foam Association of America (SPFA) Professional Certification Program for SPF application, the Air Barrier Association of America (ABAA) training course and the Home Energy Rating System (HERS) rater course.

“Jeremy offers our customers a unique perspective and understanding of the opportunities and challenges in today’s building and construction industry,” commented Bill Brengel, General Manager for Bayer’s SPF business. “His collaborative and practical approach will help focus our sales and technical teams on solving problems and achieving maximum value as our customers apply spray foam in a variety of applications.”

Parker earned a systems management degree with a minor in business from Texas A&M University. He maintains active participation in the Spray Polyurethane Foam Association (SPFA).

Parker can be reached directly at jeremy.parker@bayer.com or 800-221-3626. He is based at Bayer's Spring, Texas production facility.
